

Money and Mental Health

Fall 2021 Workshop for Students

Finances can be a comfort or a stressor depending on circumstances. When there is enough money, life can be just fine; when there isn't enough money, stress can result and affect thinking and function by consuming our thoughts and creating ongoing worry. Tight student budgets can sometimes make this financial cognitive overload a sizeable problem. Mental strategies and practical action plans to avoid that money-worry spiral are important to limit anxiety and free up mental space for study.
